Anti-Semites Go on Trial in Police Court

2 Charged with Provocative Speech in Meeting

A trial of two more "Christian" Mobilizers, an anti-Semitic group, began yesterday in 121st St. Court with Magistrate Issac Siegel sitting.

They are "Chief" New Moon (alias Thomas Dickson) who says he is of Indian blood, and Charles White, an advertising solicitor.

Both are under charges of disorderly conduct growing out of their anti-Semitic speech, threats and offensive language against Jews, they delivered on July 18, at a street meeting.

The case against "Chief New Moon" was presented by the state's witness yesterday. The defense, with Peter Baumer, an attorney, will be presented Friday.

White pleaded guilty and received a suspended sentence, but his story in court caused the issuance of a summons for Joseph McWilliams, chief of the "Mobilizers" and candidate for Congress on the "Destiny Party" ticket.

White told the court that he felt

"depressed" on the evening of July 18, had a "pint of port" and was in "need of money." He happened to "drop by" the headquarters of the "Christian" Mobilizers and someone there offered him $5 if he made a speech in McWilliams' behalf.

He struck the bargain, but said he couldn't recall if the things charged to him were said or happened. If he did, he "apologized to the Jewish race."

Magistrate Siegel then asked him if he saw in the court room the man who offered him the $5 that he had not yet received. White scanned the faces in the court room. It was noted that McWilliams who had been there suddenly slipped away. The summons for him was then ordered.
