

Excerpt from "The Pressure Boys", p.117:

Howard S. Anderson, for no reason that anyone could explain, was permitted by the Dies group to criticize James Roosevelt, the President's movie-executive son, for failing to contribute enough to churches. This had no more to do with the case than the known fact that Dies hadn't paid his taxes on a tract of land in his home town since 1930 and owed the tax collector $857.93 at the time Anderson testified. Dodging the collection plate and the tax collector are not necessarily traits imported from Russia.
