Asks Probe Of Bund At Boeing

A thorough investigation of the activities of German Bund members in the Boeing airplane plants here was asked of the Civil Aeronautics Authority by Aeronautics Mechanics Union No. 751, this week.

The Boeing plant constructed the huge Stratoliner which crashed at Alde last month killing eight high-ranking Boeing technicians and two representatives of a Dutch air line.

The resolution declared that known members of the Bund, including one officer in the Nazi military organization, are employed at the Boeing plant and their activities should be scrutinized by virtue of the importance of the company in the U. S. national defense program.

Citing the un-American program of the Bund, the resolution called attention to the treasonable utterances made by Nazi spokesmen at a recent Madison Square meeting in New York City.

The resolution was also referred to Thomas Hardin, vice chairman of the air safety board. Hardin said that wing tips and part of the tail of the Stratoliner fell off before the huge plane crashed.
