

inequitable

Weisberg also invoked Rule 60(b)(5), claiming that ~~that~~ he should be granted relief from the judgement because it is inequitable. Among his reasons is that the undenied felonies by which it was procured make it inequitable. The district court ignored this entirely, the government did not deny it, and without question there is no one-year limitation, represented as absolutely "iron-clad" by the district court: (Wright & Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure, Vol 11, p. 202 "The one-year limit applicable to some of the grounds for relief in Rule 60(b) does not apply to Rule 60(b)(5)" Weisberg did argue inequity extensively, the district court ignores it, representing instead that there is an "iron-clad" one-year limit under this rule, which is not true, and it erred in ignoring Weisberg's undisputed claim to relief from the judgement based on its inequity.
