

Affidavit of Robert W. Gambino, Director of the Office of Security of CIA.

He qualifies himself as an expert and the rest of his affidavit is devoted to a condensed version of the preceding affidavits. In fact, he incorporates the Owen affidavit by reference. What is missing in all of this is any representation of what was withheld is not part of the public domain or even that Gambino had a way of knowing what was part of the public domain. The allegations are now over ten years old and this of course raises more questions about some that are 13 years old and about the representations made for them.

However euphemistically the CIA describes its components, the Office of Security is a strange place to be the repository of political records on Dr. King who was a man of nonviolence and it also is a strange place to have an expert who might have any idea of what is and is not known.
