marked for special remarks, usually of a criminal nature immigrants have a short biologically autobiography printed such as, Carlos Ventura, born Buenos Aires, 1934, residence Buenos Aires till 1955 occupation was student immigrated to USSR, 1956. This is enough to insure any one who reads it that Carlos along with any other of his fellow immigrants will be given the proper treatment and attention, so that he never gets too far away from his registered address, or too high at his work. But otherwise immigrants in the USSR, a few french, spanish, and Eastern European are treated with more respect than the Russians treat each other particularly in the matter of being awarded an apartment very immigrant, no matter how unimportant he may have been in his native country, he much less worry about as concerning getting the apartment and being assigned to work as his Russian born counterpart. This is part of the nation wide drive to impress all foreigners as to the high level of life in the USSR.

12 miles outside of Moscow is a show collective farm for foreigners tourist who wish to see a Russian average collective farm, on it is almost every imaginable help to man possible including automatic milkers, feeders, even automatic floor cleaners. The collective farms at this place along with their counterparts at the same sort of place just south of Leningrad have in well built apartment houses with food and clothing stores built right into the first floors.

For the benefit of anyone who doesn't want to be duped I suggest you take the Moscow to ^{want} Leningrad highway for 24 miles until you come to Ustyech where by asking directions you can in five minutes find a real collective farm, a village of the small black wood and scrub wood houses, seen throughout the Soviet Union and although it's 50 minutes from the Kremlin it doesn't have electricity or gas, inside plumbing is unknown and the only automation is that done with a broom. There are ~~only~~ 45,000 collective farms in the Soviet Union of this type or well as 7,400 state farms run by the government. Collective farms number 65,5 million people or 31.4% of the total population.
