New Orleans Plot Thickens

IN his latest press conference, New Orleans District Attorney Jim Garrison dropped another plot boiler into the Kennedy assassination case.

Five days before the assassination, says Garrison, Lee Harvey Oswald, who was an agent of the CIA, says Garrison, sent a telegram to FBI director J. Edgar Hoover warning that an attempt would be made on the President's life in Dallas, says Garrison.

Garrison did not produce the telegram nor promise to do so when the first of his alleged conspirators goes on trial in New Orleans in February. But he said if the American people were convinced that it existed, they would not tolerate the continuation in places of power of those (including not only Hoover but Chief Justice Earl Warren and evidently President Johnson himself) who suppressed the truth about the assassination and made Oswald the patsy. That is the understatement of the century.

ONE question, however, still goes unanswered. Indeed, it has scarcely been asked by any of the growing number of investigators who have attempted to tear apart the Warren Commission report.

If there were any substance to those theories that John F. Kennedy was the victim of a conspiracy—before his death and/or after it—why would those who were closest to him, who were most deeply affected by his murder, who had the most compelling personal interest in seeing that the truth be known, have expressed their satisfaction with the official explanation?

The idea that the Kennedy family, with its wealth, prestige, influence and ambition, was brought or pressured into silence by somebody or just a bill of goods like the rest of us is as fantastic as any expose of the assassination that has yet been offered to the public.
