The White Knight Rides Again

Dist. Atty. Jim Garrison's adventures through the looking glass become, as a well-known little girl once put it, curiouser and curiouser. Just when you think his self-assigned crusade for truth and justice in the Kennedy assassination has covered every precinct in Wonderland, the white knight of New Orleans up and locks everybody out of the banquet hall. If they don't want to hear him rant, let 'em eat at Joe's Diner.

This un-Emily hospitality may have dumbfounded the guests, delegates to the National District Attorneys Association convention in Mr. Garrison's home city. It shouldn't have. Aside from the quixotic past, hadn't their ungenial host just a few days before loosed his fury on a federal court—and the president of the United States for good measure—because the court had kept a magazine writer out of the Garrison dragnet for grand jury witnesses? To the Garrison mind this was proof positive that the court was stooge in a giant conspiracy—aided and abetted by the FBI, the CIA and maybe even the DAR, who knows—to suppress truth and its great liberator, him.

Well, you can understand why his fellow D.A.'s were not anxious to hear more of the same at their banquet. They told him so, and that was when he ordered the dining room doors locked. It didn't matter that the tables already were set and the roast was ready for carving. As Garrison told the startled NDAA president, with becoming humility, "You're not running this show, I am."

This latest episode surely ought to awaken whatever following Garrison may have had till now, except maybe for a few hopeless fantasy addicts.

The full story of all that preceded the rifle slaying of President Kennedy in Dallas in 1963 may never be known. Many sincere people persist in doubting that Harvey Lee Oswald acted alone, notwithstanding the Warren Commission's inability to find any believable evidence to the contrary.

It may be argued that the Warren probe left some questions unanswered—as countless book writers have reaped royalties pointing out. But if Mr. Garrison has uncovered anything new and useful, he has yet to give it impressive presentation. For all his carelessness with others' reputations, he has succeeded thus far only in exposing himself.
