

Oswald's Motive Remains Riddle

WASHINGTON BUREAU

WASHINGTON — One question exists that no amount of investigation by the Warren Commission has revealed.

No one, including the Warren Commission, really knows why Lee Harvey Oswald killed President Kennedy, a man he admired.

"The commission couldn't make a definitive determination of Oswald's motives," the report says. "Thus, others may study Lee Oswald's life and arrive at their own conclusions as to his possible motives."

"The commission could not make a definite determination contributed to his capacity to risk all in cruel and irresponsible actions." They were:

"His deep-rooted resentment of all authority which was expressed in a hostility toward every society in which he lived."

"His inability to enter into meaningful relationships with people, and a continuous pattern of rejecting his environment in favor of new surroundings."

"His urge to try to find a place in history and despair at times over failures at various undertakings."

"His capacity for violence as evidenced by his attempt to kill Gen. Walker."

"His avowed commitment to Marxism and communism, as he understood the terms and developed his own interpretation of them; this was expressed by his antagonism toward the United States, by his defection to the Soviet Union, by his failure to be reconciled with life in the United States even after his disenchantment with the Soviet Union and by his efforts, though frustrated, to go to Cuba."
