Well, It's a Start

The House after solemn deliberation has approved a bill authorizing the government to keep the rifle that Lee Harvey Oswald used to kill President Kennedy.

That is of course fitting. The murder weapon technically belonged to Oswald's widow. If it had been permitted to change hands in a private sale, the nation might have been treated to the objectionable spectacle of a travelling show displaying this morbid souvenir. There remain a good many thousands of similar foreign-made weapons that anyone including minors can buy through the mail order houses. A bill by Senator Dodd of Connecticut that would impose some controls on this traffic has never been reported out of committee.

Perhaps Congress in its wisdom will some day see a parallel and get around to voting on the Dodd bill, too.
