Crisis Reveals Trust in Press

STANFORD, Calif. One of the most important deductions from the events centering on President Kennedy's assassination is that Americans trust their free press and their free broadcasting system, according to Dr. Wilbur Schramm.

These did not fail the American people in any important way, said the director of the Institute for Communication Research at Stanford University in the foreword of a new volume, "The Kennedy Assassination and the American Public: Social Communication in Crisis."

"The people got the full news, they got it fast and they got it, with a very few exceptions, accurately," Dr. Schramm stated.

The very fullness of the news won confidence in it. And developments cut the ground out from under any belief that a nationally dangerous conspiracy was involved, it was pointed out.

The volume was written by Bradley S. Greenberg, now at Michigan State University, and Edwin B. Parker of Stanford. It includes the findings from 1300 interviews in the week following the assassination.

Royalties from the 392-page, $8.95 volume by Stanford University Press will be donated to the John F. Kennedy Memorial Library, it was announced.
