Bottom section containing additional handwritten notes and several official stamps.

The first part of the document is a list of names and titles, possibly a table of contents or a list of participants. The text is written in a cursive script and includes various words and phrases, some of which are underlined. The handwriting is somewhat faded and difficult to decipher in some places. There are several lines of text, with some words appearing to be underlined, such as "The first part" and "The second part".

The second part of the document is a shorter section, also written in cursive. It appears to be a summary or a conclusion of the first part. The text is less dense than the first section and contains fewer words. There are some underlines and what appears to be a signature or a name at the end of the text.

Handwritten text in cursive script, possibly a letter or memo, containing several lines of text that are partially obscured by noise and artifacts.

Handwritten text in cursive script, possibly a signature or a closing phrase, located at the bottom of the page.

[Faint, illegible text, possibly a salutation or opening paragraph]

[Faint, illegible text, likely the main body of the letter]

[Faint, illegible text, possibly a closing or signature]

I am sure you will find the following information of interest. The FBI report to the Economic Committee is that, in 1944, the Bell Telephone Co. was a "major employer" of women. When the OWB from the House brought Senators in to discuss with the chairwoman of the Senate Committee, presumably for a week, and gave them the "militarized" women, the long performance of the kind of the little theater, they were stunned.

I trust you can understand how we feel about this matter. I trust you will take the long run with it. At the same time, I would like to see a committee of Congress to study this matter. I am sure you will find it of interest. I am sure you will find it of interest.
