BOWERS. I just am unable to describe rather than it was something out of the ordinary, a sort of milling around, but something occurred in this particular spot which was out of the ordinary, which attracted my eye for some reason, which I could not identify.

BALL. You couldn't describe it?

BOWERS. Nothing that I could pinpoint as having happened that—

BALL. Afterwards did a good many people come up there on this high ground at the tower?

Bowers told Mark Lane on film for his documentary "Rush to Judgement" that he thought he saw a little puff of smoke or a little flash of light come from under the trees at the time of the rifle reports which killed the President.

Lee Bowers had been receiving death threats and had taken out a large insurance policy before he was killed in an unusual one car accident in Midlothian, Texas, on August 9, 1966. His car drifted, according to two eye witnesses, into a concrete bridge abutment at 9:30 a.m. going at a speed of 50 miles per hour. The doctor from Midlothian who attended Bowers stated that he did not have a heart attack and that he thought Bowers was in some sort of strange shock.

James R. Worrell, 23, died in a motorcycle-auto accident in Dallas on November 9, 1966. Neither Dallas paper referred to Worrell as an important witness to the assassination. Not only did Worrell testify that he saw the rifle fire from the "Oswald" window, he said he saw a suspect run from the building within three minutes after the shots were fired. His view of the killer, in our opinion, is what made it so necessary for Worrell to die.

Marilyn Magyar (Marilyn Moon or Delilah), 27, of Islip, New York, was a belly dancer and
