Dear Harold

I forgot to mention in my letter written yesterday that I would indeed like to have some information and your comments on the worth of material in the CD Rom set that I mentioned having seen. It was called I think "The JFK Assassination".

I have not actually viewed the set, by saying I had "seen" it I simply meant to say I had noticed ("seen") it on display in a bookshop. All I ~~have~~ did was to read what is written on the cover. However I must assume that other people in my audience at the AHTA conference may have seen it too and therefore I can expect to be asked about it.

Of course it is okay if I just say I have not seen it and am not able to offer any evaluation on its contents. On the other hand if I can pass on what you can tell me about it, that is okay too.

A major part of the CD Rom set seems (from the description on the cover) to be based on Jim Marrs' "Crossfire". I do not have a copy of this book but I have seen it. I do not know whether Marrs holds to any particular theory or whether he embraces more than one theory, but I recall you advised me not to buy it. I assume therefore Marrs does wander away from from what can be shown to be real and true.

I am writing this in great haste in my lunch break at work, and I have to leave it here. Must go now.

yours,
Ray
