WASHINGTON : The Commerce Department said Friday that consumers in the United States cut spending 2 percent in January, when deep snow and freezing weather stalled the Eastern part of the Nation. In a separate report, the Labor Department said wholesale prices rose 0.5 per cent in January, in a continuation of the inflationary pace of recent months. The effect of the weather on consumer buying was emphasized by the fact that retail sales increased in January of 1975 when it was near the end of the recession, when 7.9 per cent of the work force was unemployed and industrial production was falling. The January decrease in retail sales followed a 3.9 per cent increase in December that interpreted as an encouraging sign that the economic slowdown had ended. The wholesale figure does not include the full impact of a frigid winter. The January increase was the lowest in five months and prices were only 4.9 per cent higher than a year ago which is moderate compared to the rampant inflation of recent years.
