Dear Mr. Hoch:

This is in reply to your letter of January 18, 1968, concerning records of the Warren Commission.

We are sending you copies of two documents besides the guidelines, that govern the withholding of records of the Commission from research. The relevant provisions of the "Freedom of Information Act" (5 U.S.C. 552) are those which authorize the withholding of records specifically withheld by statute, security classified records, investigatory files compiled for law enforcement purposes, and personnel records.

As stated in the guidelines, the records are to be reviewed at intervals of five and ten years after the first general review in 1965 and thereafter at ten year intervals. As you will note, there is a provision in the Attorney General's letter of April 13, 1965 (page 4) that unclassified documents of the Commission that are withheld from research may be made available to individual researchers who secure permission from the agency concerned. Anyone who wishes to take advantage of this provision may expedite action on his application by applying directly to the agency concerned rather than to the National Archives, as we would simply transmit the application to that agency if we received the application. We have not received permission from any agency to make withheld documents available to anyone under this provision.

The 75-year rule of nondisclosure which normally applies to investigative reports is mentioned on page 4 of the Attorney General's letter in connection with the periodic review of Commission documents. There is no fixed period of nondisclosure for any of the records, however. Each document withheld is to be reviewed individually during each of the periodic reviews.

We are currently reviewing and making available the records created by the Commission itself. Those withheld at this time will be reviewed again in 1970. The major portion of the basic records of the Commission is available to researchers.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Hoch:

This is in reply to your letter of February 19, 1968, concerning records of the Warren Commission.

The 75 year rule of nondisclosure of investigative reports is currently applicable to investigative reports submitted to bodies other than the Warren Commission which are in the National Archives. The rule was in effect before the assassination of President Kennedy.

We are not aware of any documents from the office of President Johnson on which the withholding of Warren Commission documents from research is based, except the memorandum of Mr. McGeorge Bundy of April 19, 1965, approving the procedures proposed by the Attorney General for making records of the Commission available for research.

The copies of documents ordered in your letter have been mailed to you.

Sincerely yours,

Robert H. Bahmer
