

You Don't Need a Weberman...

As the tenth anniversary of the JFK assassination approaches next month — November 22 — two groups will mark the event in Washington with rallies and a symposium, agitating for the release of information about the assassination now locked up in the National Archives.

On November 23, the Committee to Open the Archives and Examine the Evidence will rally in front of the National Archives at 1:00 pm. Organized by A.J. Weberman, who gained notoriety a few years ago by going through Bob Dylan's garbage and organizing the Dylan Liberation Front, the group will focus their energies on opening up the Archives. Reached in New York, Weberman said that his committee was interested in investigating the deaths of both Kennedys, Martin Luther King, Dag Hammerskold, Hale Boggs, and Walter Reuther, and the shooting of George Wallace. Weberman said that the Committee was interested in finding out what happened to John Kennedy's brain, which, according to The New York Times, mysteriously disappeared from the Archives last year. Speakers will include Sherman Skolnick, Mae Brussell, Mark Lane, Donald Freed, and Carl Oglesby. In addition, the world premier of "Executive Action," a film about the Kennedy assassination, will be held. The group will also march to Congress and demand that Gerald Ford not be confirmed as Vice-President because of his position on the Warren Commission.

While all this is going on the Committee to Investigate Assassinations will be scheduling a speakers' series at Georgetown University. Admission will be $15 do for the two-day symposium. The Committee, which includes people who blame the Kennedy assassination on members of the CIA and the Mafia, has been trying to use the courts to open up the evidence in the Archives for public view.
