

Congress

It is not surprising that the press of America fosters the myth that the killing of Senator Robert Kennedy was the work of a lone individual. Nothing more was expected of the press, but certainly we had a right to expect more from Congress.

Congress is supposed to be a co-equal with the President. After five recent assassinations, surely someone in Congress should become suspicious. But instead of a real investigation, Congress permits the President to name another commission.

Members of Congress merely repeat the old cliches that this is the work of one lone demented individual. Congressmen and Senators bray the establishment line like a pasture full of castrated jackasses.
