

Washington Post, 12/1/63 (excerpt)

"Shortly after noon, on the sixth floor of the Texas School Book Depository Building, Charles Givens, a porter, saw Oswald and asked if he wanted to go to lunch. "Not now, " Oswald replied, "Just send the elevator back up."

"Although the sixth floor of the textbook storage building is a dead storage area, the presence of Oswald, a stock clerk, in the deserted area did not appear to arouse Givens' suspicions."
