

Inspector Thomas J Kelley, testifying on the line of fire from a theoretical assassin on the overpass to the President, said,

...never at any time was he in a position to take a wound in the throat which from the drawings that have been given me, that I have been shown by the Commission, would he take a wound in the throat which would have exited higher than the throat or in the shoulder. From the evidence that has been shown previously, the wound in the throat was lower on the President's body than the wound in the shoulder, and--

Specter By the wound in the shoulder do you mean the wound in the back of the President's neck, the base of his neck?

Kelley Yes.

Secret Service agent Kellerman told the Commission,

The other wound that I noticed was on his shoulder.

Specter Which shoulder.

(2H 81)

...nobody was aware until they lifted him up that there was a hole in his shoulder...

Secret Service agent Greer testified,

...when the doctors were ~~from~~ performing the autopsy, they saw this hole in the right shoulder or back of the head, and in the back, and that was the first I had known that he was ever shot there...

Specter What conversation was there concerning the wound on the right back?...Approximately where in the President's back was the bullet hole?

Greer It was, to the best of my recollection it was back here, just in the soft part of that shoulder.

(2H 127)

Secret Service agent Hill said,

...I saw an opening in the back, about six inches below the neckline to the right-hand side of the spinal column.
