Dear Mr. Stamm:

Here is the requested (ordered?) report on articles included in the December issue:

I may have made myself guilty of insubordination, but I must confess that, unlike yourself, I did not consider your unsolicited advice regarding the Feldman article binding on me. As for your own article, I have not yet reached a decision. I did not consider it for the December issue at all, for the simple reason that your second offer of your own superior material to replace someone else's inferior material sent to you for proofreading (sic!) was no more ethical than the first one. You should not expect me to be responsive to such offers; I do not communicate on that wave length. My editorial decisions must be unaffected by such indiscretions. Incidentally, if Feldman and/or Meagher did some proofreading for TMO, would the same kind of advice be forthcoming as has on two occasions reached me from the individual who does the proofreading now?

Sincerely,

M. S. Arnoni

P.S. I am appreciative of your help and wish it to continue if you are willing to perform a technical linguistic job; I am not interested in forming with you an editorial board. Is this suggestion acceptable to you?

As for your article, I will read it again very soon, and I'll let you know.

bcc: Sylvia Meagher
