Mr. David Welsh
RAMPARTS
301 Broadway
San Francisco, California

Dear Mr. Welsh:

You will understand that after what had transpired I could not help entertaining suspicions even while you were apologizing to me during a telephone conversation. I was wondering whether that apology amounted to anything other than a new attempt to obtain that which you had not obtained by the method for which you were now apologizing. So strong was my suspiciousness that I even believed to be discerning, in the very course of your expressing regrets, concealed but shrewd efforts to elicit from me then and there essential information even while pretending merely to be negotiating the terms of its release.

Your silence after the whole "sensation" turned out to be a bubble seems regrettably to confirm the correctness of those suspicions. Since I was no depository of something that might be tricked out of me, if not in one way then perhaps in another, why bother with any manifestation of the sincerity of your wastefully spent regrets?

If I am imputing to you motives even baser than those you admitted, please, understand that while you have fully provoked my suspicions, you have not allayed them.

Sincerely,

M. S. Arnoni
