EDITOR M. S. ARNONI

Dear Max:

If our correspondence must serve nothing but the pleasure principle of the Mutually Happy Idiots; if no thought must ever be raised that as little as implies standards of personal commitment; if it's all just for fun; and if what we say about anybody depends on no idea or principle but strictly on idiosyncratic personality interplays (judging anyone's deeds not at all by them, but by whether or not we choose to like the perpetrator at the moment), then I suggest that we not only abide by an "abeyance for a while" of our friendship, but make the thing more permanent. Yes, and this too is "partly for your own good."

Sincerely,

Menachem
