

11/3/70 (7)

Aylva —

This may interest you, since it involves a question that might normally ~~arise~~ arise from evidence that JFK was struck in the head from the front by a small, light-weight, fast, fragile bullet. The question is: can the same type of bullet have caused the damage associated with the front-neck wound (i.e. can both wounds have been caused by the same rifle fired two separate times)? My answer is yes.

I wrote this hastily, so not all of it may be clear to you. I can justify it in somewhat better detail later, if you desire.

Still,

Dick

Received undated
11/6/70