Mrs. Meagher:

Would you believe, Mrs. Lincoln thinks Lizzie Borden had psychomotor epilepsy?

I want to tell you how much I am using and enjoying your book. I would have written sooner but thought you might not want me to. You are a very witty woman; it's Mr. Fred Graham who is the bore. I don't know how these people manage to remain so ignorant. Your book is delightful, indispensable and absolutely dependable. In fact, I think it is the source book, and for a change the people who advertised it told the truth.

I have also read Mr. Thompson's book and it also is useful. Delightful little job on the Fuller stretcher, but I draw a different conclusion. We part company on the souvenir hunter. It was a plant.

I have not changed my mind and I have further evolved my theory. You were right about the fact that this couldn't happen and no one notice. They noticed. And then it gets so sensational I don't dare go on. -One thing, for sure, if ~~they~~ this case hadn't happened, it would have had to be invented. Do you still think I have?

Ain't seen a saucer all winter. Haven't had time to look. I have been reading some science fiction and have found some pretty good books: I like the Foundation trilogy of Asimov. Have you any interest in the Lizzie Borden case? There's a new book laying it onto Lizzie again. By Victoria Lincoln. That woman is another Helen Markham, with a college education. Uncle John done it.

Sincerely,

PS I don't think DeSalvo was the strangler either. He is merely a fantacist.
