Dearest Sylvia:

I have the services of a typist for the last few days because I'm still struggling to get through. I'm close to the end but I'm beginning to think that I'm like the desert wanderer seeing a mirage.

To answer your question, you are quite correct that what I was referring to is listed "Oswald, notebooks" and that it is not you who have gone mad but I who misstated the case; I was so absorbed with Walker at the time I spoke to you that I confused the issue. Your index is in every sense identical with mine.

Bill loved your flowers (I sent an azalea plant with a thought to the future—he can plant it in the garden and it will be a joy forever!) I'm happy to say that he's doing much better than we had any right to imagine. I've talked to him almost every day and I shall see him tomorrow. He asks about you frequently. As soon as I get the bill from the florist, I will alert you to the sum in which I make out your check.

Your information gleaned from Manchester was interesting but I find it almost impossible to place any credence in anything he says. I understand nothing whatsoever about the Lifton-Sauvage business but as we well know, where this case is concerned anything can happen and as our man, Garrison, likes to say, "black is white and white is black". I am still in a state of sheer amazement at what Lane has revealed, not so much for what the implications are but for the miracle of the hour calling forth the man! I don't know how I can bear it till the trial begins, but we've lived through this much agonizing anticipation and I guess we'll survive until T Day.

Chris was completely positive and encouraging but the fact remains that I still have no contract. As I indicated to you on the 'phone however, since Lane's talk with Mort last night it really doesn't matter quite so much.

I was delighted to hear you sounding almost like yourself again and hope you have no further health problems.

Back to the grind. All here join in sending warmest greetings.

Love,

Maggie
