

JOYCE later told her she stopped at the Police Station two or three times and left without making up her mind whether she should pay the money, which she believed was $25, to get him released. JOYCE asked a police officer to show her the sign or literature OSWALD had been carrying and when she saw it pertained to FAIR PLAY FOR CUBA she said she was not anxious to have him released. The police officer suggested to her that instead of paying the $25 she should contact one of the city or state officials who has the power of parole and OSWALD would be released on parole until his case was heard, without her having to pay the $25. JOYCE then contacted a family friend, EMILE BRUNO, who operates the B & W Package Liquor Store, 2712 Canal Street, and Mr. BRUNO contacted someone else who had OSWALD paroled.

Mrs. MURRET advised OSWALD visited her home about two or three times from the time he arrived in the Spring of 1963 to Labor Day, which is the last day she saw or heard from him.

Several weeks after OSWALD brought his wife and child to New Orleans, MARILYN MURRET took them crabbing. OSWALD told Mrs. MURRET when he first arrived in New Orleans that his wife liked to be near water and he liked to go crabbing, and also liked the water, so he thought he would settle in New Orleans if he could find work.

On another visit to her house, OSWALD and his wife and child spent the entire day and ate dinner with them. She is of the opinion her daughter, JOYCE, was visiting her at the time. On this occasion, Mr. MURRET drove them to their Magazine Street apartment in his green, Mercury, 1956 model.

OSWALD, his wife and child, visited the MURRETS on Labor Day. Mrs. MURRET's son, JOHN, drove them home to their apartment in a Dodge, four door, white color, 1960 model. Mrs. MURRET and daughter, MARILYN, accompanied them.

Mrs. MURRET stated no members of her family went into the apartment at any time, to her knowledge.

OSWALD gave her telephone number, HU 8-4326, as the place where he could be reached while he was seeking employment. He would then telephone her during the day to find out if any prospective employer or employment agency left a message for him. She recalled there were several calls for him and the messages were relayed to him. She could not recall the names of any of the people who telephoned.
