Dear Mark,

I enjoyed your review of Manchester and was pleased to see that we both reacted to many of the same outrages in his ludicrous and lewd opus.

You probably are already aware of this but just in case it did escape notice, there is an excellent review of Rush to Judgment in the January 1967 Yale Law Journal, written by Marcus Raskin. He is surprisingly tough in his criticism of the Commission. I can't understand why his article wasn't reported anywhere as a news story.

Bobbs-Merrill has left me without a set of galleys and without the master copy of my ms., with the result that I do not even have an up-to-date text of the book. Apparently a set of proofs is quite expensive. If it is not inconvenient, do you think you could send me your set, when you have quite finished with it? I will pay any costs, of course, and it would be a real help.

The CBS "inquiry" was such a blatant whitewash that it reduced me to giggles alternating with nausea. I've done a review of it for the September issue of TMO.

All the best,

Yours sincerely,
