Dear Sir:

Everywhere one goes these days one is instructed on the horrors of Communist terror. But nothing is ever said, either in the press, in conversation or in the pulpit, about the recent wholesale slaughter of 500,000 Indonesians who were slain because they were "suspected" of being Communists.

Is it all right to murder 500,000 people on the off chance that they might be Communists? By its silence on this subject, the pulpit and the press have inferred acceptance of this bizarre principle: the double-standard-idea that mass murder is just dandy as long as the victims are "suspected" Communists.

I doubt that God will so be mocked.

Sincerely,
