Dear Sylvia ...

Only a note to express my hope that you are feeling much better these days and that I may hear from you to that effect soon.

It is my intention to institute a slightly adjusted schedule -- in fact it has been initiated -- which will include one or two day visits to the city every month or so. Should your health permit, I would be delighted to see you during one of the more imminent ones.

One of my pseudonymous (M. M. Delfano) efforts, The Living Prophets, was brought out by Dell a few weeks ago and serialization has just begun (of a portion of it) in The National Tattler, an also-somewhat-editorially-reformed competitor of The National Enquirer.

My contact with Bud and the Washington efforts have been virtually suspended, but I do hope to reestablish same soon. Although the long, long grind -- notwithstanding the bits tossed out, such as Wecht's getting to the material (I have yet to see his full commentary, but the newspaper fragments were less than encouraging) -- certainly tends to wear one's initiative thin.
