Dear Ms. Meagher:

The enclosed letter came to me in inter-office mail---from what source, I have no idea.

I could not send it on without adding a comment of my own: Proofreading your book was one of the really high spots of my career in publishing. My copy is well worn from picking it up to read at random, and from lending it to friends (with strict instructions to return it!).

Sincerely,

A handwritten signature in cursive script, appearing to read "G. Moore", with a horizontal line extending to the right.
