Dear Sylvia,

I hope your trip was an enjoyable one.

While you were gone, there were a lot of interesting developments out of the House Committee on Assassinations. The Committee's credibility has taken a nose dive. This is partly because the "backroom politicking" has made the Committee look as if it is made up of a bunch of asses. However, the responsibility for much of the furor lies with the media. With time running out on the committee, it was pressured into "leaking" sensationalized stories, which had not been or could not be substantiated, in order to justify its existence. The committee has really been too busy defending itself to even begin a serious investigation, if one is in fact intended. I very much doubt it.

Well, I'd better not attempt to summarize what has happened since January, it is much too involved. The enclosed articles will give you a pretty good idea, although much of what went on did not make it to the papers. If you'd like anymore information, just let me know. I'm always here if you need me.

Sincerely,
Karen
