Dear Karen,

I have just this minute received your huge envelope with the collection of press clippings and magazine articles which you amassed for me while I was enjoying a carefree and delightful cruise around the world.

Karen, I can scarcely find words adequate to thank you for your great kindness and generosity in accumulating this collection for me. I cannot recall any occasion when a virtual stranger has gone so far out of her way for my benefit. I know that you must have had costs, for postage at least, and I am enclosing a small check to cover your expenditure. I am also taking the liberty of sending you under separate cover a signed copy of Accessories, again an inadequate expression of my gratitude.

I will read the clippings with greatest interest, as soon as I finish this letter, but I do not wish to delay sending you my deeply felt thanks. From my conversations with other critics since I returned from my cruise, I am despondent about the prospects of this new "investigation". It seems to me that the worst kinds of misinformation and mischief are surfacing and that the House Select Committee is merely floundering and dashing up blind alleys. I fear that the end result will damage us just as we were badly hurt by the ludicrous Garrison "investigation".

The only comfort I can take is that young people like you will give their energy, intelligence, and dedication to carrying on the search for the truth about Dallas. Again, my warm thanks and affection!

Yours very sincerely,
