Dear Ms. Meagher:

As mentioned in my telephone call, I am a writer assigned by American History Illustrated magazine to do an article marking the 25th anniversary of the assassination of President John F. Kennedy.

The piece would try to bring into focus some well-informed opinions as to what in fact took place on that tragic day in Dallas. It would, as well, try to pay particular attention to those first-generation research-strivers -- you, certainly, singular among them -- who did so much, so well, and against such odds, to try to seek out the truth in the matter.

In this regard I would very much appreciate the opportunity of speaking with you regarding such quest. Your retrospection would help provide the article with some insights no one else could effect.

Two recent issues of American History Illustrated are enclosed. They contain articles I have written for the magazine. This publication deals with cultural, social, military, and political history, is published for a general audience, and has a circulation of about 150,000 nationwide.

In hope that you may be willing to reminisce a bit about what I take to be was a labor-of-love, I will call you in a few days.

Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

Edward Oxford

P.S. I have spoken with Mrs. Mary Ferrell and plan to visit her in the near future.
