

Dear Sylvia

I was sorry to hear that you're ill. Terry Lipmaster told me and I wanted to let you know how I felt. I wanted you to know that after reading your criticism of my novel "The Perfect Patsy," I was wounded and pouted for a while; but after I picked myself off the floor it became clear that I agreed with most of what you had said, especially the part where you said you were sorry.

Your honesty has helped me to see my direction. I have worked on the second form of my manuscript and possibly by the third it will be good enough. Perhaps by then it will be widely accepted that Lee Oswald was innocent.

I am hopeful that by then I will be working on other subjects, related in some way to making "a more gentle society." I believe it has been your writings which have done the most to create an army of Kennedy researchers and activists for the cause of truth.

Thank you and please take care of yourself; be well.

Sincerely yours
your friend
Bob Hawson
