Dear Bill,

What joyful news! Your special delivery just arrived and I am delighted to learn that you are already leaving hospital for home, well ahead of schedule. I had thought of telephoning you at the hospital tonight, but under the happy circumstances, I will give you some time to resettle at home, greatly reassured as I am about your progress. Since Ray is due here next Saturday, perhaps we will phone you together.

It has been a quiet week (so far as the case is concerned), by and large. I haven't any news kernels—I think we are in a dormancy, waiting for the Garrison investigation to come to a head, or for some other new decisive development. My book is at the printers now, galleys expected at the end of May, and page proofs in July.

Again, Bill, I am very, very happy at your rapid progress and hope for more good news when we speak next weekend. All my love,
