dear mrs. marr:

i trust that you will be more tolerant of the distant audience's improbability of spelling your name correctly than 'randi' would be. in any case i thot it worth risking your displeasure, since 'randi' referred to you last night as a writer, as well as researcher, on the kennedy affair. altho reception/sleepiness considerations operated against intelligent comprehension, much of what you said would appear to bear further hearing/reading [as does mr. fox's book, altho i suspect it is written from a too-restricted viewpoint]. if any of your writings on the subject have been accessibly published, could you let me have a list that i might track them down? perhaps you will receive enough mail to prepare a bibliography to send interested persons.

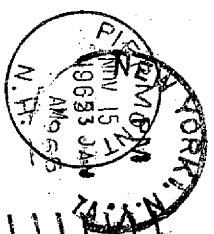

incidentally, if the mail be light enough to permit of a reply, we should be interested in learning whether the poisonous, egomaniacal personality that 'randi' manages to project quite regularly to this corner is representative of the person behind the microphone, or whether the actuality is more human than the image.
