

2/27/66

Dear Sylvia:

The quote from page 152 of the French Edition of "Red Roses" is on page 148 of the English edition as follows:

(that you sent)

"Buddy Walthers, the policeman from the Sheriff's office, states for his part that the shots - or at least one shot - came from the balustrade of the motorway bridge. He ran towards it, that was when, with a Secret Service man, he found a rifle bullet in the grass near the bridge - the "fourth bullet"?"

But there is another mention in the English edition on page 205 which is the one attached to the picture, as follows:

"Why is the existence of a fourth rifle bullet denied?"

"Detective Bill Walthers declares that he found it. He described to me himself how he found the bullet and a picture taken immediately after the shooting by a Dallas Times photographer shows this detective and a Secret Service man in the act of retrieving a bullet from the turf at the roadside."

The above quotation is in Chapter 14 - The Devil's Advocate on page 205. Check the French version and see if this is mentioned in there.

Love

Lillian