

LBJ and the CIA

tionens o

CLAYTON FRITCHEY

"It's a hell of a way to learn things," President Kennedy said immediately after the Bay of Pigs, "but I have learned one thing from this businessthat is that we will have to deal with the CIA."

Kennedy may have learned this but there is nothing in the report on the CIA that Lyndon Johnson has just uncritically accepted from his own three-man investigation panel that suggests the President has learned the same lesson.

When the Chief Executive appointed Under Secretary of State Katzenbach, HEW Secretary John Gardner and CIA Director Richard Helms to review CIA activities in the light of its raillion dollar secret subsidies to U. S. students and others, he limited the scope of the inquiry. The panel seems to have limited it even further.

By instantly launching his own inquiry, the President succeeded in heading off much broader investigations proposed in the Senate and House. Now, of course, with the CIA out of the headlines the whole matter will be laid quietly to rest with the innocuous findings of the Johnson parel.

The panel recommends that the secret subsidies should be terminated (as they would have been anyway) and vaguely suggests that perhaps ways can be found openly to finance some of the future activities. The net effect is to say that everything the CIA had done is blameless, but should never be allowed to happen again.

* *

Apparently the agency itself was getting; cold feet, for the panel notes "that starting well before the appearance of recent publicity, the CLA had initiated and pursued efforts to disengage from certain of these activities."

Leaving ethics and the good name of the U. S. aside, what did we ever get for all these millions? The panel is silent. Can anyone seriously believe that sending a handful of students (some of them critical of the U. S.) to international meetings abroad saved the day for the free world.

Scores of new nations have emerged in the last decade or so, but not one has gone Communist. There are 125 countries in the UN but in the same period of time none has been taken over by outside Communist aggression, subversion or even persuasion. The notion that a small platoon of U. S. students has been a serious factor in all this is hardly worthy of discussion.

In canvassing other means of promoting student appearances abroad, the panel says:

"It is of the greatest importance to our future and the future of free institutions everywhere that other nations, especially their young people, know and understand American viewpoints. There is no better way to meet this need than through the activity of private American organizations."

The panel should think again. The best way for "other nations to know and understand" our country is not through what the CIA or the USIA or the Voice of America say, but through what the American government and American people do. The rest of the world is impressed not by what we preach but what we practice. And of course that's the way we ourselves judge others.

* *

The panel also had no comment on the reason most often advanced to excuse the CIA for its secrecy in spending so much on these activities. Many of the CIA's best friends argued that it had to act covertly because back in the 1950s, when the subsidies began, Congress would never have approved such expenditures of public funds.

That may well be, and it may also be that Congress was wrong, but who is the CIA to take the law and public monies into its own mands and secretly encumvent the will of Congress which, after all, is presumed to represent the American people.

If it can ignore or thwart the Congress in one instance, it can in others, especially if, as in the present case the CIA can escape without even a frown from the President or his panel.

As matters stand, there is small chance of stricter CIA supervision until another melodrama again arouses public indignation, for the President's heart is with the small group of Senate-House hawks that has successfully resisted every effort to bring the CIA under the kind of control other government agencies are subjected to.

32