Dear Menahem:

Sorry that we will not have your company for dinner. Certainly we will be listening to your speech. In that we have not heard from Sylvia, we assume that our invitation to her has been accepted. Sylvia, dinner at six? Seven? Gaeton Fonzi wants an opportunity to get to meet you.

Gaeton called this week and advised that the Republican political boss of the City of Philadelphia called "Greater Philadelphia Magazine" and requested that Fonzi be released from his duties on the magazine for the duration of the mayoralty campaign. It seems that Specter wants Gaeton to work for him as a writer during the campaign which has as its aim the winning of the mayor's chair for that great reformer, Arlen Specter. Gaeton reports that upon learning the news his stomach hurt him. But, dear Menahem, please take note of how loving and incapable of holding grudges we Americans are. Fonzi has publicly announced that he considers Specter as immoral man. But there is no grudge, indeed, not the tiniest hard feeling. On the contrary, Specter's answer is in the form of a munificent offer of honest employment in the service of an ascending political star. Are we not a beautiful people, Menahem?

On March 31st the women of Philadelphia will belong to me, and you will have to be satisfied with my

Warmest regards,

Vince
