Dear Sylvia,

Thanks for your letter of a month ago. Glad that you managed to get out of the hot city for a sojourn at the shore. Being in Minnesota one comes to miss the ocean dearly. That was one of the intangibles of my trip to the West Coast--being able to see the ocean. I am an old beachcomber from way back, and in fact went to Cornell originally to get a degree in Wildlife Management (which I abandoned for Psychology).

I had hoped to be in New York this September since I was supposed to be on a panel on the role of the Psychologist in the free clinic system at APA, which is in Washington D.C. this year. I was going to see Harold, then my parents in Phila., and then visit New York. Then some things came up and I scrapped the idea for a free clinic conference in Washington this January, so maybe I'll be up to New York then.

Right now my professional responsibilities are keeping me busy and no vacation seems to be in sight.

Well, I just thought I'd drop you a short note--nothing is really happening. Drop me a line if and when you get the chance when your vacation is over.

Best wishes,

Gary
