Dear Yvna,

A week ago today I returned from Yucatan where I had gone to see some of the Maya ruins. It was a fabulous experience. No words can do ~~them~~ justice to the marvels wrought by the Maya. One cannot believe what one sees even while looking at it. It exceeded all my expectations.

And in another sense it disappointed them, for I underestimate the rigor of traveling into the jungle and clambering up ~~and~~ steep stone staircases to reach temples and palaces atop pyramids; and I was unable to put out of mind in the evening the wonders I had seen during the day and anticipate.

the following day, for which, too, I found some reading on the subject was useful, with the result I did not do a thing about Garrison, the material for which was laid out on the table in my hotel room in Merida.

That is yet to be done. But now we are on the eve of Clay Shaw's trial and I think I will wait to relate it to that if it is not postponed.

I will call shortly and if you are agreeable will come over for a chat.

Tom
