Dear Mr. Striso,

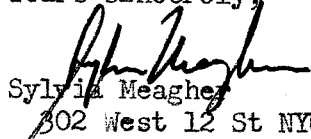

When you telephoned me on Monday night, I had not yet received your letter of the 21st. You must have thought me ungracious when I did not mention or thank you for your kind remarks. When your letter arrived on Tuesday, I tried to telephone you to explain what must have seemed a very obtuse response; but you were not at home.

I am sorry that you have not called again as I am certainly interested in your approach and would like to know a little more about the witness with whom you are negotiating--it may be that I can provide relevant information, as I was able in another instance earlier this week to add a missing piece to another mosaic--almost inadvertently, as it happened.

Do please get in touch again when you can and perhaps we can have lunch or you can drop by one evening to talk.

With cordial regards,

Yours sincerely,
