Dear Mr. Weinstein,

Exactly four weeks have passed since I mailed you a review of four books on the Warren Report, after first emphasizing in a telephone conversation that I believed I could place the review elsewhere if Studies did not wish to use it and after your assurance that you would notify me within a matter of days whether or not you intended to use it. It surprises me that after soliciting this review, which I agreed to write during a period of considerable pressure arising from prior commitments, and which I wrote at some sacrifice of vacation time, I have still heard nothing from you. My contacts with other periodicals for which I have written in recent months, whether paid or unpaid, have been characterized by courtesy and conscientiousness in fulfilling commitments, on the part of the editors concerned as well as on my part.

I am sorry that my experience with Studies has been rather less satisfactory. I am not acquainted with your magazine (never having received the sample copy I requested on August 23rd) and I agreed to present material on the Warren Report only out of regard for David Mermelstein, who first broached the subject. Since so much time has elapsed, I have decided to withdraw my review and request that you return it promptly.

Yours sincerely,

Sylvia Meagher
