Dear Miss Northcott,

I am wondering if my letter to you dated the 14th of September may have gone lost? I wrote then to ask whether you were still intending to publish my article on the Charles Givens documents and how they were used to manufacture a supposed lone assassin.

Because this article is original work rather than a review of books on the assassination, and because it contains new findings of material importance, I would be most disappointed if you found yourself unable to use it, as you had first planned to do. Certainly no question of fee should obstruct or delay publication, so far as I am concerned, and you may feel free to use the article without payment.

Please let me know as soon as possible, and forgive my pressing the matter.

Sincerely yours,

Sylvia Meagher
