Dear Sylvia:

Our check for the remaining $200 due on completion of the index, though Lord knows the job you did, under such hectic conditions, was beyond money. Thanks very, very much.

I talked with Leon Friedman briefly and got an impression of uncomfortable evasion, almost as if he really didn't want to know how weak the play was. I pointed out some obvious errors and suggested that the omissions were really crucial and that expert help was the thing. He ducked out to take another call and never called back. I guess we'd better write it off as another bit of opportunism, though he may still call. A shame to let it go before the public the way it is, though.

I hope we can all get together next time Tink is in town with a little breathing room (he was in this office till 3:15 a.m. checking corrections, then drove down to teach a class). I'd like to meet you.

Again, thanks.

Best,

Don
