Sunday night

Dear Sylvia,

I intend to reach you twice by phone over the weekend; my lack of success suggests you may have had to go to Miami -- Golly, I hope not.

You're so wonderful. Clearly I blundered in that last part of Marcus's letter by mentioning you. I misunderstood what you told me when this broke, that you hadn't seen anything wrong about attributing when you went over the mas. Clearly you weren't looking at it for that reason, and well, it was just a blunder. I'm sorry, dear friend, to make you pay the cost of my blunders. I'll be in N.Y. Wed., Thurs., Friday -- let's have dinner. Maybe this is some way I can point out to Roy that I really missed your reading of the mas. I didn't mean to let it come out that way.

Re Garrison. I haven't yet got a copy of the LA Free Press. But from what you told me it's clear as hell that the piece was slanted. What I think I'm going to do is write them and point out some gross "errors" in Garrison's remarks printed in their sheet in late December. I think I talked to Digby Dickel about this, but after all this interview I no longer recollect whom I told what.

But as you say, this is sheer sabotage -- it's so damned IRRELEVANT!!
