Dear Tink:

Thanks for reading and commenting on the article.

Horseley called again. I feel that you should know that I consider the data on whether you are a United States government agent or not incomplete, but that I entertain a suspicion at this time that you are. In terms of probability, I consider this more likely than not. So, in that we live in times which are cruel and likely to get crueler, and knowing that I may be doing you an injustice, I still had to warn him of my suspicion.

It will be a pleasure to admit to you later, should you do work to rectify the damage which you have done by failing to confront the truth in the assassination, that I have been egregiously wrong about you. I am always available to discuss this matter with you at very great length.

Sincerely yours,

Vince Salandria
