GROSSE POINTE PARK, Mich., May 15 — The Democratic Presidential primary campaign in Michigan ended tonight, overshadowed by the shooting this afternoon of Gov. George C. Wallace in Laurel, Md.

The Alabama Governor was regarded as the favorite in this state's first Presidential primary since 1928. He ended his effort here on Saturday.

Senator George McGovern of South Dakota, who was stumping the state today and Senator Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota, who was in Maryland, were considered in a sharp contest for second place in tomorrow's balloting. Both men canceled all campaigning when they learned of the shooting of Mr. Wallace.

Michigan has no party registration, and voters are permitted to participate in either party's election merely by pulling the appropriate lever upon entering the polling booths.

As a result, Mr. Wallace is expected to be the main beneficiary of the Republican crossover. It may also help Mr. McGovern. Both men profited substantially from Republican voting in the Wisconsin Democratic primary.

Busing is an Issue

Many in the heavily white Detroit suburbs, such as this wealthy, Republican enclave east of the city, are expected to back the Alabamian because of their intense concern over the prospect of massive busing to integrate the schools.

A Republican source in Grosse Pointe Park predicted that Governor Wallace would get about 30 per cent of the vote here. The area is ordinarily about 70 per cent Republican, he said.

"They say they spend $600 per kid in Detroit for schools, and we pay $1,200," the Republican remarked. "Why should we send our children there?" A Federal court in Detroit is expected to impose a metropolitan busing plan.

"We're finding a lot more Wallace support than we supposed," said Mike Davis, a Republican precinct captain in suburban Birmingham. People who live near the schools "are darn near rabid on it," he said.

Local Democrats voiced dismay at the shooting of Mr. Wallace. Most said they were unable to judge the impact on the primary, but one leading politician said a sympathy vote would probably increase the Governor's lead.

The state Democratic chairman, James M. McNeely, called the shooting "a sick and senseless act." He said he had ordered the immediate cancellation of party-sponsored television commercials highly critical of the Governor.

Senator McGovern, campaigning earlier today in suburban Livonia, was politely but not especially enthusiastically received by about 200 retired automobile workers. He called for a program allowing employes to take pension benefits to new jobs.

Representative Shirley Chisholm, Democrat of Brooklyn, who was in the state today, is also on the ballot, as are three Senators no longer in contention: Vance Hartke of Indiana, Henry M. Jackson of Washington and Edmund S. Muskie of Maine.

Michigan's 132 delegate votes at the Democratic National Convention will be apportioned on the basis of tomorrow's vote. In the Republican primary, President Nixon is opposed by Representative Paul N. McCloskey Jr., who is not campaigning.

The polls open at 7 A.M. and close at 8 P.M., Eastern standard time.
