

12 February 1971

The Editor
The New York Times

Sir:

I have been reading in your recent columns and editorials about the pecuniary affairs or ethical standards of John Connally, J. Lee Rankin, Gerald Ford, Lewis Powell, and J. Edgar Hoover. What do all these prominent men have in common?

The Warren Report. Two were directly instrumental in determining the contents and the findings. All have insisted on its sacrosanctity ever since.

A pretty assortment of men, to investigate anything.

Yours sincerely,

Sylvia Meagher
302 West 12 Street
New York 10014

(Not sent)